

22. Threatened Species in Indonesia

Recognizing the wealth of unique animal and plant species in Indonesia the 9th General Assembly of IUCN meeting in Lucerne in June 1966 congratulates the Indonesian Government on the measures already taken, particularly in respect of Resolutions 15 and 27 of the 8th General Assembly meeting in Nairobi in 1963, regarding the conservation of the Javan Rhinoceros and the Orang Utan welcomes the Government's proposal to establish a research Station in Ujung Kulon as a part of the Indonesian participation in the International Biological Programme, and urges the Government to continue its efforts to conserve all other rare or threatened species, including the Komodo Dragon, the Sumatran Tapir, the Anoa, the Javanese Tiger, Birds of Paradise and Rothschild's Starling.
